New recommendations to update the Work Opportunity Tax Credit

We just released a new brief, Opportunity Knocks: How expanding the Work Opportunity Tax Credit could grow businesses, help low-skill workers, and close the skills gap.

Businesses are struggling to find workers. At the same time, millions of people across the country who want to work can't access programs like apprenticeships that would help them develop skills to meet those business needs.

Check out our new brief to read about why policy makers should expand the Work Opportunity Tax Credit (WOTC) to support businesses providing work-based learning to low-skill workers.

How expanding WOTC could grow businesses, help low-skill workers, and close the skills gap.

- Millions of jobs are open because workers lack necessary skills.
- The majority of people hired under WOTC are TANF and SNAP recipients – populations that aren't getting the skills training they need.
- We should improve WOTC to support businesses that invest in TRAINING – this would help deliver skills to workers and businesses that need them.
