Every worker. Every industry. A strong economy.

Stranded workers, skill “booster shots” and the future of work

Technology and market forces are changing the workplace, the talent needs of employers, and the skills workers need to get and keep good jobs. Read this Medium piece about how “stranded workers” are confronting a disappearing market for their skills; and how reskilling “booster shots” can train and retrain workers for 21st Century jobs. We suggest some prescriptions that could ease the impact of automation and the future of work.

This piece was written by NSC board member Van Ton-Quinlivan, Executive Vice Chancellor of Workforce and Digital Futures, California Community Colleges; and NSC’s Federal Policy Director, Kermit Kaleba. It is the first in a series about the future of work.
