Administration poised to release guidance on apprenticeship this week

This week, the administration is poised to release guidance on new “Industry-Recognized Apprenticeships.” It will likely focus on how third-party certifiers would recognize programs and quality standards and will provide insight about what the administration is likely to propose in future regulations.

How well will this guidance align with our recommendations to policy makers last fall that the new system engage local and regional experts, expand intermediaries, promote quality standards that benefit both workers and businesses, support recruitment and retention strategies to uphold a diverse pipeline of apprentices and measure outcomes?

Check out NSC's latest blog on what to expect from and look for in DOL guidance on apprenticeship this week.
